WE NEED TO TALK

...because beauty podcasts
are having a real moment

FAT MASCARA

New Yorkers Jessica Matlin and Jennifer Goldstein have interviewed an enviable list of beauty moguls, from Bobbi Brown to Jo Malone, since launching in 2016. As well as their in-depth discussions with the pros, we love their fun-but-actually-really-useful 'raise a wand' segment, where they share their must-have products of the week.

THE EMMA GUNS SHOW

Former beauty editor Emma Gunavardhana uses her impressive contacts book to chat to industry insiders like Dr Murad and James Read, which will inspire any budding beauty entrepreneurs. She's also perfected the art of the insightful heart-to-heart. Our favourite episodes so far? Sali Hughes and Fleur de Force.

FULL COVERAGE

LA-based Brits Harriet Hadfield (a make-up artist) and Lindsey Kelk (author and beauty junkie) present a podcast aimed at fellow product addicts. Chatting about the latest launches (they love a highlighter), coolest brands and industry gossip, their fortnightly show is the ultimate companion for your getting-ready regime.

BREAKING BEAUTY

Hilarious Canadian hosts Jill Dunn and Carlene Higgins built their podcast on the premise that, "behind every bestseller, there's a damn good story" – and explore the development of iconic products with their creators. Renowned for cracking open the Champagne while recording, they're our kind of women.
